

Rehoming your Pet

There are many reasons why people may be trying to rehome their pet. No matter what the reason may be here is a guide to help rehome your Pet successfully. It is always best to try and rehome your pet directly to another home environment verses the Pet going to a shelter environment. This will reduce the stress for the Pet and will overall cause the Pet to adjust to the new home quicker. Below is an easy step process to get started with re-homing your Pet.

- 1) Click on this link. Rehome
- 2) Click "Get Started" and then answer and complete the questions following.
- 3) Make sure that your photo of the Pet is clear and entered. The clearer the picture and the more center the picture is around the Pet, the higher the chance it is for someone to be interested in your Pet.
- 4) Make a bio for your Pet. Write all the good things about your Pet! Always write to positive things about your Pet.
- 5) After everything is completed, make sure you are still trying to rehome your Pet other ways. Just because you're using one route of rehoming, doesn't mean you should stop there.

While you are trying to rehome, you can always call the Shelter and be put on our waiting list. This will allow us to pull your Pet in when we have available space. Once again, if you can rehome your Pet directly to another home environment, that is always best for the Pet. A shelter should be the last resort.
